Incident Analysis Workshop

Part 4: Ethical Analysis

Assumption 1
Assumption 2
Assumption 3

Whoops! Misplaced Opinion

Assumption 1
Assumption 2
Assumption 3

‘Building’ Your Paper
Part 1: Opening Sentence

In a well built house, the roof is completely symmetrical. In the paper, the concluding sentence is a direct conceptual match of the opening sentence.

Part 4: Ethical Analysis

Assumptions are the foundation upon which your opinion is built.

Facts are not your opinion, or your analysis. They are properly ordered, like shingles on a well built house.
A Well Built Incident Analysis (part 2)

- The Ethical Analysis is the main body of the paper, just as the walls define the shape of a house.

- The Analysis is founded on your previously mentioned assumptions.

- The Ethical Analysis does not introduce new facts – it references those in the previous list.

Incident Analysis Workshop
A Paper with Misplaced Components (part 1)

- Opening sentence is brief and well-constructed.

- Opinion language has crept into an assumption.

- Opinion language has crept into the fact listing.
A new assumption overloads the Ethical Analysis and new facts clutter the logic of the argument.

The conclusion ‘runs on’ with unneeded repetition, and therefore is mismatched with the opening sentence.

Here’s how to fix it: move misplaced text to the correct sections.