General Course Purpose

Beginning Hindi, a basic introductory course, places emphasis on the development of proficiency in the following skills: listening, speaking, reading and writing. Students learn to function in the language within a limited context of vocabulary and structure. The course also includes a general introduction to culture.

Course Prerequisites/Co-requisites

Prerequisite for HIN 102 is HIN 101 or instructor approval.

Course Objectives

- A. Listening
The student will understand short, learned material and some full sentences, particularly, where context strongly supports understanding, and speech is clearly audible. The student will understand words and phrases from simple questions, statements, and high-frequency commands, although repetition, rephrasing, and/or a slowed rate of speech may be required.
- B. Speaking
The student will communicate by relying heavily on learned materials, while occasionally expanding these through simple recombination of their elements. The student will ask questions or make statements involving learned materials. The student will show signs of spontaneity, although, speech continues to consist of learned material rather than of personalized, situationally adapted materials. The student's pronunciation will approximate native speech, although, it may be strongly influenced by first language. The student's vocabulary centers on areas such as basic objects, places, and most common kinship terms. The student will be able to make himself or herself understood by sympathetic native speakers, although, repetition may be required.
- C. Reading
Where vocabulary has been learned, the student can read common messages, phrases, or expressions. At times, but not on a consistent basis, students may be able to interpret material in context at a slightly higher level.
- D. Writing
The student will be able to write on a basic proficiency level.
