New Virginia State Laws Take Effect July 1, 2010

July 1, 2010 marked a new milestone - many new state laws, as well as state and local fiscal 2011 budgets, went into effect.

There are a number of new laws that Virginians are now subject to.

Driver safety
- Expanding on an existing law, motorists must change lanes, if possible to do so safely, to avoid driving in the highway lane next to a tow truck or motorist assistance vehicle assisting with an incident on the shoulder. Previously, the "move over" law applied only to police, fire and rescue vehicles with blue or red flashing lights. It now applies to vehicles displaying amber-colored flashing lights as well.

- All passengers under 18 are now required to buckle up in the front and back seat of a car, and the violation is now considered a primary offense, meaning that police can pull over a vehicle if they suspect a violation. For those 18 and over, not wearing a seatbelt in the front seat remains a secondary offense, which means police can ticket offenders only if they stop them for something else, such as speeding. It remains legal for adult passengers in the back seat to not wear a seatbelt.

Speed limits
- The maximum speed limit in Virginia is now 70 mph on certain interstate highways, instead of 65 mph.
